PREFACE

The Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) has developed the Australian Standard Classification of Religious Groups (ASCRG) in response to a wide community interest in the religious affiliations of the Australian population and to meet a growing statistical and administrative need.

As the National Statistical Standard the ASCRG should be used whenever demographic, labour and social statistics are classified by religious group. The ABS will implement the classification in its own statistical work, for example, it was used in the 1996 Census of Population and Housing. The ABS urges its use by other government agencies, community groups, and academic and private sector organisations collecting, analysing, or using information relating to religion. This will improve the comparability of data from these sources.

This publication will be revised periodically to reflect changes in the religious profile of Australia, incorporating the evolution of new religious groups and the growth and decline of others.

The assistance and efforts of numerous organisations and individuals in providing information and advice, and otherwise contributing to the consultation process during the development of the classification, is gratefully acknowledged.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

INTRODUCTION

Religious affiliation provides a useful indicator of aspects of the cultural diversity of Australia's multicultural society. In order to satisfy wide community interest in the religious affiliations of the Australian population, and to meet a growing statistical and administrative need, the ABS has developed the ASCRG.

The ASCRG is intended for use in collecting, aggregating and disseminating data relating to the religious affiliation of the Australian population, or subsets of the population. It is envisaged that the classification will improve the usefulness of religion data provided on administrative forms such as hospital admission and school enrolment forms, as well as being used to classify religion data from statistical censuses and surveys.

Data classified by religious group can be used for policy and planning purposes related to the location and development of educational facilities and church buildings, the provision of aged persons' care facilities and services, and the provision of other social services by religious organisations. The classification will enhance the usefulness of data used to assist in assigning chaplains and other care providers to hospitals, prisons, armed services, universities, and other institutions, and for the allocation of time to particular community groups on public radio and in other media. The ASCRG will also be a useful tool in general sociological research.

In the classification, religions are grouped into progressively broader categories on the basis of similarity in terms of religious beliefs, religious practices and the cultural heritage of adherents. This results in those religions and religious groups which are closely related in terms of their intrinsic characteristics being closely aligned in the structure of the classification. Thus, similar populations of religious adherents are aligned to produce a classification that will be useful for the purposes of Australian social analysis.

This classification has been developed by the ABS by means of extensive research of Australian and overseas literature in the field of interest, employment of statistical principles and techniques relating to statistical classification, and analysis of existing data relating to the religious profile of Australia (primarily data from the 1991 Census of Population and Housing). This methodology was supported and enhanced by information and advice from academics and religious experts, and by consultation with community and religious groups interested in this topic.

To make the classification as useful as possible, the number of adherents of a particular religious group has been a significant factor in developing the classification structure so that the current religious composition of Australia is accurately reflected. Thus, Christian denominations are extensively identified. However, the identification of individual religions or denominations in the classification, and the way in which they are grouped, does not imply the expression of any opinion on the part of the ABS concerning the relative merit or importance of particular religions or the people who practice them.

The ABS will use the ASCRG in its own statistical work, starting with the 1996 Census of Population and Housing, and will actively promote its use by other government agencies, private organisations, community groups, and individuals collecting, analysing, or using information relating to religion. As the ASCRG has the status of a National Statistical Standard it should be used for the production and dissemination of all official statistics on religion.

DEFINITION OF RELIGION

Precise definition of the concept of religion, or of what generally constitutes 'a religion', is difficult, if not impossible, because of the intangible and wide-ranging nature of the topic. Generally, a religion is regarded as a set of beliefs and practices, usually involving acknowledgment of a divine or higher being or power, by which people order the conduct of their lives both practically and in a moral sense. This method of defining religion in terms of a mixture of beliefs, practices, and a Supernatural Being giving form and meaning to existence was used by the High Court of Australia in 1983. The High Court held that 'the beliefs, practices and observances of the Church of the New Faith (Scientology) were a religion in Victoria'. As part of the ruling, it was stated that:

For the purposes of the law, the criteria of religion are twofold: first, belief in a Supernatural Being, Thing or Principle; and second, the acceptance of canons of conduct in order to give effect to that belief, though canons of conduct which offend against the ordinary laws are outside the area of any immunity, privilege or right conferred on the grounds of religion.

Although the above definition may be regarded as useful in going some way toward describing the nature of the entities included in the classification, it is by no means all-inclusive. Some of the entities included in the classification do not fit the definition, but are regarded, either universally or widely, as religions. Such entities are included to ensure that the classification is comprehensive and useful, and to make the classification widely acceptable.

For instance, Buddhism is universally accepted as a religion although it does not acknowledge a personal God. Similarly, Confucianism is regarded as a religion, even though it involves no belief in the supernatural, because it provides the moral code of its adherents. However, not all philosophies which involve beliefs about the nature of life or codes of behaviour are accepted as religions. For instance, Marxism is regarded as a religion by some because it is based on a coherent set of beliefs, but it is more generally regarded as a political philosophy and is, therefore, excluded from the classification.

Thus, the extent of opinion in regard to what constitutes a 'religion' (particularly the opinion of the adherents), practical considerations, and generally-held notions about the nature of philosophies, organisations and institutions all play a role in defining religion or identifying the concepts that underpin religion. These elements complement the more stringent notions of belief, practices and a Supernatural Being included in the definition of religion.

Although the classification is intended to classify entities defined as religions, its base level units (that is, the categories at its most detailed level) are not all of the same order. Factors such as the number of adherents in Australia and the organisational structure of particular religions have made it expedient to include different sorts of religious entities as the categories at the finest (most differentiated) level of the classification.

The base level units therefore describe: groups of religions, religions, and subsets of religions, such as, religious denominations, administrative and organisational groupings, groups of churches, churches, and breakaway groups. All these entities, while not necessarily constituting discrete religions, are comprised of one or more subsets of the spectrum of world-wide religions. They are described here as Religious Groups in that each is composed of a group of people who share common religious beliefs and practices, or belong to organisations that are unified by a common religious theme. Thus, the base level entities in the classification are termed Religious Groups and the classification is called The Australian Standard Classification of Religious Groups (ASCRG).

SCOPE OF THE CLASSIFICATION

The scope of the classification is all religions and subsets of religions in the world as defined above (see: Definition of religion). In practice, only those religious groups that have significant numbers of adherents in Australia are separately identified in the classification structure. However, all other religions are covered, notionally being included in the most appropriate residual category (Miscellaneous, Other, or Not Elsewhere Classified categories) of the classification. The code structure of the classification also allows the identification of religious groups not presently separately identified if such a need arises.

The classification also includes a 'No Religion' Broad Group which could be considered to be inconsistent with the basis of the classification as described above and perhaps lies outside the scope of the religion topic. It has been included for practical reasons and to make the classification more useful. Many statistical and administrative applications need to accommodate the whole range of responses to a question on religion, including the response 'No Religion'.

CLASSIFICATION CRITERIA AND THEIR APPLICATION

The classification criteria are the principles by which classification categories are aggregated to form broader or higher-level categories in the classification structure. Three classification criteria are used in the ASCRG to form the categories of the classification:

- similar religious beliefs;
- similar religious practices; and/or
- cultural heritage.

Religious Groups are combined to form the Narrow Groups (middle level) of the classification on the basis of their similarity in terms of these criteria. Although the Religious Groups are not necessarily identical in any particular characteristics, the Narrow Groups formed are relatively homogeneous in terms of the set of classification criteria.

The Broad Groups were developed in a slightly different manner. On the basis of the number of adherents, worldwide, the major world religions are generally accepted as: Christian, Muslim, Hindu, Buddhist, Tao, Confucian, Tribal, Animist, and Jewish. It would seem appropriate to designate these major religions as Broad Groups in the classification, particularly as they are broadly homogeneous in terms of the classification criteria (beliefs, practices, and cultural heritage). However, consideration of the number of adherents of each of these religions (in Australia) indicates that it is unacceptable in terms of the statistical balance of the classification to include Tao, Confucian, Tribal and Animist religions as Broad Groups. Furthermore, the usefulness and acceptability of the classification would be impaired by such a decision.

Thus, on the basis of a broad application of all the classification criteria, supported by the size of the religions in Australia, Buddhism, Christianity, Hinduism, Islam and Judaism comprise Broad Groups within the classification. This application of the criteria enables the delineation of appropriate Narrow Groups (constructed on the basis of a more rigorous application of the criteria) as subsets (sub-categories) of these major groups. The classification criteria are then applied so that other major world religions and residual Narrow Groups form a meaningful and useful classification structure within a residual Broad Group: Other Religions.

The structure can legitimately be described in conventional terms: Religious Groups (base-level units) grouped to form Narrow Groups on the basis of similarity in terms of the classification criteria; Narrow Groups grouped to form Broad Groups on the basis of a broader similarity in terms of the classification criteria.

A further Broad Group (No Religion) has been included in the classification for practical reasons and to make the classification more useful (see: Scope of the classification). Because this group consists of entities not considered to be Religious Groups it was, obviously, not developed in accordance with the classification criteria.

DESIGN CONSTRAINTS

The theoretical and conceptual considerations for developing the classification were tempered by other considerations such as the practical usefulness of the classification for collecting data from both statistical and administrative collections, the analytical usefulness of data collected within the framework of the classification, and the size of the categories at each level of the classification in terms of the number of Australian adherents.

Generally, the classification criteria were applied in a straightforward manner. However, some decisions in regard to the identification of Religious Groups and the progressive grouping of units were made on the basis of whether it would be possible to collect data in relation to certain religious sub-sets or whether data for particular religions would be more useful if classified in a broader or finer manner. These decisions were made in consultation with religious and ethnic communities, religious experts and users of religious data.

One effect of these constraints on the classification has been that some religious groups which are significant in a world context are not separately identified in the structure, some Broad Groups are limited in the number of Narrow Groups they subsume, and some major world religions are represented at levels below the Broad Group level. The most notable effect has been in the large number of Narrow Groups and Religious Groups represented as subsets of the Broad Group Christianity.

CLASSIFICATION STRUCTURE

The ASCRG has a three-level hierarchical structure.

The third and most detailed level of the classification consists of the base units which are Religious Groups as described above (see: Definition of religion). The classification consists of 107 base or third-level units. Some Religious Groups are 'not elsewhere classified' (nec) categories, which contain entities that are not listed separately in the classification. This level of the classification can be termed the 'Religious Group' level.

The second level of the classification comprises 33 Narrow Groups of Religious Groups similar in terms of the classification criteria. Narrow Groups contain between one and 14 Religious Groups.

The first and most general level of the classification comprises seven Broad Groups. These are formed by aggregating Narrow Groups (and hence Religious Groups) which are broadly similar in terms of the classification criteria. Broad Group seven comprises entities which are not of the order of Religious Groups (see: Scope of the classification).

EXPANDED CLASSIFICATION

The base-level units of the classification are Religious Groups which are of the order of groups of religions, religions, and subsets of religions (see: Definition of religion). Therefore, many of the base-level units are comprised of a number of further discrete religious entities which can be separately itemised. These entities are related to particular Religious Groups on the basis of administrative or organisational links, or because of a close similarity in terms of the classification criteria. An expanded classification structure listing these sub-third-level entities is provided so that the definition, nature, extent and boundaries of the base units of the classification is clearer. This will improve the usefulness of the classification for data analysis, policy making and service provision. It should be noted, however, that the purpose of this listing is to provide indicative information on the content of each base-level unit, and should not be considered as exhaustive or prescriptive. More detailed information on the content of each base-level unit may be found in Appendix 3: Coding Index: Numerical Order.

CODE SCHEME

One, two or three, and four-digit codes are assigned to the first, second and third-level units of the classification respectively. The first digit identifies the Broad Group in which each Religious Group or Narrow Group is contained. The first two or three digits taken together identify the Narrow Group in which each Religious Group is contained. The four-digit codes represent the Religious Groups.

In most instances, three-digit codes represent the Narrow Groups of the classification. However, the Narrow Groups representing Pentecostal Religions, Other Protestant Religions, and Other Christian Religions each contain nine or more Religious Groups. It is therefore impossible for a three-digit code to uniquely identify the Narrow Group of each four-digit Religious Group in these instances. These Narrow Groups are therefore allocated two-digit codes which allow the unique identification of each Religious Group they contain. (Two-digit codes were not used for Narrow Groups generally because the Broad Group Christianity contains more than nine Narrow Groups.)

If processing or storage systems require all categories at a particular level of the classification to use the same number of digits, it is recommended the codes of the three two-digit Narrow Groups are back filled by use of the digit zero: 240 Pentecostal, 280 Other Protestant, 290 Other Christian.

The religious profile of Australia is likely to change over time because of factors such as changing migration patterns. From time to time, it may be necessary to add Religious Groups to, or delete Religious Groups from, the lists of Religious Groups currently separately identified in the classification as the number of adherents for particular religions changes. (All Religious Groups not separately identified in the classification are notionally included in a residual category.)

If a Religious Group needs to be added to (separately identified in) the classification structure, it will be allocated the next available four digit code, in the numerical sequence of codes, of the Narrow Group to which it is being added. If a Religious Group ceases to have a sufficient number of adherents in Australia to be separately identified, and it is consequently deleted from the classification, its code will not be reallocated to another Religious Group as this will complicate the storage of time series data.

The Religious Groups in Narrow Groups are, generally speaking, in alphabetical order. However, this order of units, while useful, is not imperative and it is not considered that the addition of new units, which may disrupt the alphabetical order, will affect the usefulness of the classification structure.

The ASCRG code scheme is devised so that any future changes to the classification structure are easily accommodated. However, in order that the classification remain a standard, users should not make changes to the structure. Users should contact the ABS and identify any apparent problems they encounter in the course of implementation, data collection, or data analysis.

Reserved codes for residual categories

In each Narrow Group a four-digit code, consisting of the two or three digits of the Narrow Group code followed by the digits 99 or 9, is reserved as a residual or nec category. All Religious Groups which are not separately defined in the classification are notionally included in the residual or nec category of the Narrow Group to which they relate. The classification currently has eight residual categories at the base level for Narrow Groups where ABS experience indicates they are required.

In each Broad Group, codes are also reserved for residual categories at the Narrow Group level. These codes consist of the Broad Group code followed by 9 or 99. These categories are termed 'Other' or 'Miscellaneous' categories and consist of separately identified Religious Groups which do not fit into other Narrow Groups on the basis of the classification criteria. The classification currently contains two such residual categories.

Provision exists in the code structure for the creation of additional residual categories. If experience indicates the need for further residual categories the ABS will create them and add them to the classification structure. It should be noted that residual categories are part of the classification structure and should not be created or used merely to 'dump' responses containing insufficient data to code to a separately identified category of the classification (see: Supplementary codes, and Coding rules).

Supplementary codes      Supplementary codes are used to process inadequately described responses in statistical collections. The codes are of three types:

- four-digit codes ending with one or more zeros;
- four-digit codes commencing with three zeros; and
- the four-digit code 2001.

Codes ending in zero are described as 'not further defined' (nfd) codes and are used to code responses to a question about religion which cannot be coded to the detailed (Religious Group) level of the classification but which can be coded to a higher level of the classification structure.

For example, responses which cannot be identified as relating directly to a particular Religious Group, but which are known to be within the range of religions relating to a particular Narrow Group, are coded to that Narrow group. Such responses are allocated an nfd code consisting of the two or three-digit code of the Narrow Group followed by 00 or 0. For instance, the response 'Orthodox' does not contain sufficient information to be coded directly to any particular Religious Group, but it can be coded to Narrow Group 223: Orthodox, which encompasses all Orthodox religions. It is thus allocated the code 2230: Orthodox, nfd.

Similarly, responses which do not contain sufficient information to be related directly to a particular Religious Group, or to a Narrow Group, but which are known to be within the range of religions relating to a particular Broad Group, are coded to that Broad Group. Such responses are allocated an nfd code consisting of the one-digit code of the Broad Group followed by 000. For instance, the response 'Christian' does not contain sufficient information to be related directly to a Religious Group or a Narrow Group, but it can be coded to Broad Group 2: Christianity, which encompasses all Christian religions. It is thus allocated the code 2000: Christianity, nfd.

Thus, religion responses which are only codable at the Broad or Narrow Group levels of the classification can be processed within a collection coded at the Religious Group level.

There are some cases where the classification structure would, in theory, support the creation of a supplementary nfd code not already included in the range of valid supplementary codes used by the ABS. For example, no nfd code has been created for Narrow Group 207, Catholic, as the response 'Catholic' is properly allocated to the category 2071, Western Catholic.

Four-digit codes commencing with 000 are supplementary codes included for operational purposes to facilitate the coding of responses such as inadequately described religious affiliation, etc., which present particular problems in that they cannot be allocated a Religious Group, Narrow Group or Broad Group code.

An additional supplementary code 2001: Apostolic Church, so described, has been created to meet a particular need. The Apostolic Church (Australia) is a separately identified Religious Group (2401) in the Narrow Group Pentecostal (24). The Apostolic Church of Queensland (2901) and the New Apostolic Church (2906) are separately identified Religious Groups in the Narrow Group, Other Christian (29). The response 'Apostolic Church' lacks sufficient information to code it to the appropriate Narrow Group. To code such a response to 'Christian, nfd' would be to discard useful information. The ABS has, therefore, created the special supplementary code, 'Apostolic Church, so described' to deal with such responses. The code 2001 is appropriate because any responses relating to it must necessarily lie within Broad Group 2: Christianity. For publication purposes, it is, of course, perfectly proper to aggregate data coded to categories 2000 and 2001 to provide a total for Christian, nfd.

It should be noted that supplementary codes, including 2001, are not part of the classification structure. They exist for operational reasons only, and no data would be coded to them if sufficiently detailed responses were obtained in all instances. See Appendix 1 for a full list of Supplementary codes.

Coding index      Responses provided in statistical and administrative collections do not always relate directly to classification categories. A coding index is therefore necessary to act as a link between responses and the classification, enabling responses to be assigned accurately and quickly to the appropriate category of the classification.

The Coding Index has been developed to assist in the implementation and use of the classification and should be used when coding responses to questions relating to religious affiliation, religious denomination, etc. The Coding Index has been devised by reference to existing literature in the field, consultation with religious experts and ethnic and community groups, and by analysis of existing ABS data. It thus includes responses actually obtained in ABS statistical collections. It contains a comprehensive list of the most probable responses to questions relating to religion and their correct classification codes. See: Appendixes 2 and

3 for the Coding Index sorted in alphabetical and numerical (code) order respectively.

Coding rules In developing the Coding Index a number of rules were followed in assigning index entries the correct classification code. It is recommended that these rules be adhered to when coding any response that does not appear in the Coding Index provided. Decisions were made in regard to index entries on the basis of appropriate research and examination of pertinent reference material. The coding rules are as follows.

Responses which relate directly to a Religious Group category are coded to that Religious Group. Such instances include responses which are an exact match with the Religious Group category title, responses which are an exact match with the Religious Group category title except in terms of alternative spelling, the use of abbreviations, etc., and responses which match the title in terms of the fundamental or basic words of the title and differ only in terms of qualifying or extraneous words.

Responses which relate to one of the entities which are separately itemised as subsets of Religious Groups in the Expanded Classification are coded to that Religious Group.

Responses which relate directly to a Religious Group because they describe an entity which is one of a group of religions comprising the Religious Group, or a subset of the Religious Group (denomination, administrative or organisational grouping, etc.) are coded directly to that Religious Group.

Responses which cannot be identified as relating to a separately identified Religious Group in the classification are assigned a residual category code, or a supplementary code as described above (see: Reserved codes for residual categories, and Supplementary codes).

EDITING SPECIFICATIONS

Because some responses are assigned nfd or nec codes rather than the codes of particular Religious Groups, it is important that in validating input codes at editing stage, manipulating data, and deriving output items, the full range of valid codes are included in all specifications. The full range of valid codes can be obtained from Section 2: Classification structure, and Appendix 1: Supplementary codes.

CODING, STORAGE AND PRESENTATION OF DATA

Regardless of the level of aggregation envisaged for the dissemination of data, wherever possible, data should be captured, classified and stored at the base level of the classification. Collecting and storing data at the most detailed level of the classification allows the greatest flexibility for the output of data, enables more detailed and complex analyses, facilitates comparisons with previous data using different classifications, and preserves information that may prove historically useful.

However, the constraints affecting each statistical collection or other application, such as problems with confidentiality or standard errors, may not permit the collection or output of data at the lower levels of the classification. Nevertheless, the use of a standard classification will enhance data comparability even though it may not always be possible to disseminate the data at the most detailed level.

The hierarchical structure of the classification allows users the flexibility to output statistics at the level of the classification which best suits their particular purposes. Data can be presented at Broad Group level, Narrow Group level, or Religious Group level. If necessary, significant Religious Groups within a Narrow Group can be presented separately while the remaining Religious Groups within the Narrow Group are aggregated. The same principle can be adopted to highlight significant Narrow Groups within a Broad Group.

APPENDIX 1

SUPPLEMENTARY CODES

SUPPLEMENTARY CODES

NATURE OF CODES

Supplementary codes are used to process inadequately described responses in statistical collections. The supplementary codes, listed below, are of three types:

- four digit codes ending with one or more zeros used to code responses which cannot be coded to the detailed level of the classification but can be coded to a higher level of the classification structure (nfd codes);
- four digit codes commencing with zero used to code responses which cannot be allocated to a category at any level of the classification (operational codes); and
- the four digit code 2001 used to code the response 'Apostolic Church' which lacks sufficient information to code it to the appropriate Narrow Group of the classification.

APPLICATION OF CODES

Supplementary codes are not part of the classification structure. Although the list provided below contains all possible Not Further Defined codes, many of them will not be required for use in many applications. The operational codes will be needed in most coding processes. A fuller explanation of supplementary codes and their application is provided in the Coding Scheme: Supplementary codes section of the Explanatory Notes.
